

Deep learning and hierarchical generative models

Elchanan Mossel, MIT

Abstract

I will describe an attempt to formalize when and why deep learning works. It is based on the hypothesis that deep learning is efficient in learning data from "generative hierarchical models". I will introduce a family of such models and show an information theoretical separation between deep and shallow algorithms in learning such models.